Work Programme for Loss and Damage

- Risk transfer systems should be established to eliminate the agricultural risks which are encountered by the state and the producers. Within these systems, called Agriculture Insurance, to provide the sustainable guarantee of the plants, crops, greenhouses, agricultural equipment and livestock should be targeted at.
- A proper planning on insurance system should be made since the higher rates of agricultural risks would bring about an increase in the costs. Therefore, taking the financial resources into consideration, a research concerning the subvention of the insurance should be carried out by the experts of the agricultural sector.
- Defining what the 'vulnerability' is for itself, every country should prepare an action plan for the loss and damages which directly threaten the food safety and security as a result of the land degradation, forest degradation and desertification that are especially caused by the extreme and unexpected climatic events.
