15:00 – 16:30 Session II: Understanding the long-term financing needs of developing countries

Once the money is raised, what will be done to ensure developing countries get solutions they want to buy, not products the developed world wants to sell?

11:30 - 13:00 Session III: Sources of climate finance

Is there a clear path to raising finance from cuts to fossil fuel subsidies and what does it look like?

Does the panel think specific fund raising mechanisms such as the financial transaction tax should be on the agenda in Doha?

16:30 - 18:00 Session IV: Options for mobilising climate finance

Which group will be the most important in raising and using funds – government, private sector, major philanthropic donors or development banks?

Are UN led international schemes to place a levy on carbon for the shipping and aviation industries a realistic means to raise the $100bn needed annually? Can they be initiated in Doha?

Does the panel believe the economic crisis is a viable reason for climate finance contributions to be scaled back just as international aid contributions have been?

11:15 - 12:45 Session V: Lessons learnt from Fast-start finance

How can we guarantee all of the fast start finance pledged, will be delivered, and then apply this to the Green Climate Fund?
