Workshop participants are requested to make his/her reservation at Tsinghua Unisplendour International Communication Center (TUICC) since rooms have been blocked there. A shuttle bus will pick up participants from TUICC and bring them to the workshop site. When making reservations, participants should be prepared to provide a credit card number to the hotel and should mention to the hotel staff that the booking is part of the block reservations made by the Tsinghua University for the Technology Information Workshop.

Please use the attached hotel booking form and send it directly to the person identified in the form.

Please inform the UNFCCC secretariat and the University of Tsinghua if you decide to stay at a different hotel. Our local organizer will explore if a shuttle bus can be provided to pick up those participants to the workshop venue. Also, please bear in mind to try to use a hotel that is not too far away from the conference site because of the rush hour traffic, which could be unpredictable and time consuming.

QUICK FACTS ABOUT CHINA

China isn't a country - it's a different world. From shop-till-you-drop metropolises to the epic grasslands of Inner Mongolia - with deserts, sacred peaks, astounding caves, and imperial ruins - it's a land of cultural and geographic schisms. It's not that China has completely done away with its Maoist past - it's more that the “yin” of revolutionary zeal is being balanced by the “yang” of economic pragmatism, and the old guard communists are giving way to the new wave dot-commers.

It's a land of towering mountains and epic landscapes - background scenery to the fall of dynasties, the rise of emperors and the turning of the revolutionary wheel. Unless you have a couple of years and unlimited patience, it's best to follow a loose itinerary here, such as Beijing to Tibet via Xi'an's terracotta warriors, following the Silk Road route, sailing down the Yangzi River, or exploring the Dr Seuss landscape of Guangxi Province.

Beijing: Pack away those assumptions of Maoist revolutionaries in buttoned-down tunics and pods of workers performing t'ai chi in the Square; this city has embarked on a new-millennium roller-coaster ride. These days, Beijing's youth are more interested in MTV than Mao; the rhetorical slogans of the Cultural Revolution have given way to herniated English splashed across designer-copy T-shirts; and expats, tourists, foreign investors and a cellular phone-toting hipposie mix it up with the bureaucrats.

The old hutongs and buildings are being demolished, new buildings are going up, small things are giving way to big things and big things are giving way to even bigger things. This fast-paced, two-minute-noodles lifestyle doesn't please everyone - the old comrades are complaining about uppity youths and loss of values - but the capital of the People's Republic of China doesn't look like it's slowing down any time soon.
