DESCRIPTION

This guide provides a methodology for assessing the gendered impacts of policies and solutions for adaptation and mitigation, instances in which policy fails to consider gender, and how to advocate for gender-responsive policymaking to prevent the entrenchment of inequalities in the context of increased climate change and rather maximize social and gender benefits.

The process, which involves several steps, can be used to identify gaps and highlight how existing and future policies can be made more effective and equitable by fully integrating gender dimensions into the planning, implementation and evaluation processes.
