I. OPENING OF THE SESSION

(Agenda item 1)

A. Opening of the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties

1. The seventh session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, convened pursuant to Article 7.4 of the Convention, was opened at the Palais des Congrès, Marrakesh, Morocco, on 29 October 2001, by the President of the Conference at its sixth session, Mr. Jan Pronk, Minister of Housing, Spatial Planning and Environment of the Netherlands.

B. Statement by the President of the Conference of the Parties at its sixth session

(Agenda item 1(a))

2. The President of the Conference at its sixth session said that the adoption of the Bonn Agreements on the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action (decision 5/CP.6) had proved that the international community was capable of reaching agreement on global problems. In other words, multilateralism did work. Those agreements also signified the centrality of international cooperation to the higher common objectives of the global community. While globalization could be criticized, those political agreements had been the outcome of dialogue, mutual understanding, a sense of conciliation, a willingness to compromise, and a dedication to the sustainability of the earth as well as humankind. Moreover, they now made the Kyoto Protocol ratifiable, so that it could enter into force before the World Summit on Sustainable Development in 2002.

3. International relations and the United Nations were more important than ever. The events of 11 September 2001 had reverberated throughout the world, and had placed international relations in a new light; showing that international cooperation was needed to solve world problems. The greatest threat to security and stability lay in socio-economic inequality, political marginalization and neglect of values. However, international cooperation was an ongoing process in which no country could proceed alone. Together the international community could move forward, provided that it took account of the interests of one another.

4. The main aim at the sixth session of the Conference had been to reach agreement on the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. Thus, such extraneous issues as the agenda item held in abeyance at that session, and the rules of procedure, had been deferred until work was completed on the core issues. The latest scientific knowledge contained in the Third Assessment Report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) showed that the Kyoto Protocol represented only a small step forward for the climate. Much remained to be done, and the Conference must not shy away from future debate on the adequacy of commitments, while respecting the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities. Equally, a solution should be found in relation to the rules of procedure, because clear rules would simplify the process considerably.

5. The focus at the present session would now be on completing the translation of the Bonn Agreements into legal language. In Bonn, all Parties had reaffirmed their intention to complete the work on the outstanding issues in a manner that would be faithful to those agreements. And his own consultations in the inter-sessional period with political leaders had led him to think that all wanted to maintain the integrity of the political agreements reached.

6. In conclusion, he expressed his appreciation to the members of the Bureau and to the UNFCCC secretariat for their support during his term of office, and to all participants for making the Bonn session of the Conference a success.

C. Election of the President of the Conference of the Parties at its seventh session

(Agenda item 1(b))

7. At its 1st plenary meeting, on 29 October 2001, on the proposal of the outgoing President, the Conference of the Parties elected by acclamation Mr. Mohamed Elyazghi, Minister of Territorial Planning, Urban Management, Housing and Environment of Morocco, as its President.

D. Statement by the President

(Agenda item 1(c))

8. On assuming office, the President welcomed all participants to the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties. Morocco was indeed proud to be the host of the first session of the Conference to be held in Africa, a continent which greatly suffered from the negative effects of climate change, while supporting international efforts to counteract those effects. It was his hope that such efforts would be placed in the general context of the struggle to eradicate poverty and improve living conditions in the developing world. In the aftermath of the events of 11 September 2001, it was all the more necessary for the international community to work together fruitfully and in harmony. The fact that the Conference was taking place as scheduled was a clear message to those who sought to halt the march of progress towards mutual understanding among peoples and the peaceful settlement of disputes. In the scant three months that had elapsed since the end of the previous session, his country had mobilized all at its disposal to ensure a suitable working environment for the Conference, and he paid tribute to all those who had contributed to that effort. Morocco was particularly vulnerable to the impact of climate change, whether through floods or through drought, as could be seen in the countryside nearby. It was thus a firm supporter of the process initiated at Rio de Janeiro in 1992, and would soon complete the legislative procedures for accession to the Kyoto Protocol.

9. The success achieved at the Bonn session, after the uneasy denouement at the Hague, had not only been due to the sense of responsibility and political will evinced by all concerned, but must be attributed in particular to the outstanding contribution of his predecessor, Jan Pronk, whose perseverance, wealth of ideas and variety of solutions had left an indelible mark on the negotiations. He would surely be called upon again to contribute to the process. The present session of the Conference had but one objective: to give effect to the Bonn Agreements, lay the foundation for the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol, and present a strengthened Convention to the Johannesburg summit. It also had but one watchword: respect for the integrity of the Bonn Agreements. The way ahead was clear, the positions of all Parties were known; and he was convinced that dialogue, an ability to listen to the other's point of view, and a measure of determination would carry the day. For time was of the essence. The Third Assessment Report of the IPCC, "Climate Change 2001", had once again set the alarm bells ringing. The role of the Conference was not only to devise responses and solutions to the problems of climate change – but to do so in a manner that would be comprehensible to people in their daily lives. The Convention should take its rightful place, alongside the instruments on biodiversity and desertification, in the fight against poverty, hunger, and the problems of water supply. And the present session should demonstrate that multilateral negotiations within the framework of the United Nations were capable of yielding concrete decisions and commitments.

E. Addresses of welcome

(Agenda item 1(d))

10. Mr. Abdelaziz Saâdi, President of the Regional Council of Marrakesh, presented the best wishes of His Majesty Mohammed VI, King of Morocco, for the success of the Conference, and noted that the seventh session offered an historic opportunity, in view of the scientific and political nature of the issues, to make significant progress in facilitating effective action to combat climate change. Indeed, with ever-increasing drought, the desert was encroaching further, and the arable land was shrinking, phenomena that had negative effects on the economy by promoting rural-urban exodus and increasing unemployment. In conclusion, he welcomed all participants to Marrakesh, the “capital of the South”.

11. Mr. Omar Jazouli, President of the Urban Community of Marrakesh, welcomed all participants to the city of Marrakesh, an imperial city with a glorious and radiant past, and a world heritage site recognized by UNESCO. The seventh session of the Conference would be called upon to fashion solutions to the problems of global warming, drought, the ozone layer, and greenhouse gas emissions, in order to avert a worldwide disaster. As a signatory of the Convention in 1992 at Rio, Morocco had taken early measures to deal with the problem of environmental degradation with the creation by his late Majesty, King Hassan II, of a Ministry for Environmental Protection. Marrakesh, as the tourist centre of Morocco, was undertaking activities to protect the green heritage of the city, as well as projects to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in the waste treatment and transportation sectors.

F. Statement by the Executive Secretary

(Agenda item 1 (e))

12. The Executive Secretary, Mr. Michael Zammit Cutajar, assured the incoming President of his support during the session, and singled out the warm welcome accorded to all representatives by the people of the beautiful and historic city of Marrakesh and its region. He also paid special tribute to the outgoing President, Jan Pronk, who for nearly two years had devoted his energy and political commitment to the fashioning of the Bonn Agreements. Those Agreements had constituted a major step forward in combating climate change, as well as a breakthrough for multilateral cooperation. Multilateralism had been further boosted by the holding of the present session of the Conference, thanks to the determination of the host Government and notwithstanding the current upheavals in world politics. It was thus incumbent on all to maintain the political momentum generated at Bonn and transform it into substantial decisions which would guarantee the progress of the Convention and the implementation of its Kyoto Protocol.

13. Meeting the challenge ahead would require a demonstration of political will on the part of all countries, but above all those listed in Annex II. The withdrawal of the United States of America from the Protocol meant that the remaining Annex II countries must ensure that the implementation of the Protocol would lead to genuine reductions in their greenhouse gas emissions, despite the flexibility permitted by the Bonn agreements. It was precisely a change in the long-term trends of their emissions which the Convention sought to attain in one of its most important commitments, one which must remain a central aim of action by those countries. Similarly, the international community expected those countries to show the necessary political commitment to the initial phase of the clean development mechanism, a mechanism which promised much to the developing countries, but which might be affected by a lack of market demand.

14. Gathering for the first time on the African continent, the Conference of the Parties must seize the opportunity to give special consideration to the situation faced by African countries with regard to climate change. While bearing no historical responsibility for the phenomenon, they were nevertheless on the front line as regards its harmful effects. The Conference represented an opportunity, whether by strengthening action in the area of adaptation, or through the clean development mechanism, to meet the needs of those countries, particularly the least developed among them.

15. Furthermore the agenda of the session provided the Conference with an opportunity to look further ahead: the Third Assessment Report of the IPCC could yield pointers for the future work of the Convention, while the item concerning the Conference's input to the World Summit on Sustainable Development could spark a debate not only on the implementation of the Convention but also on the development of climate strategy in the medium term. The Summit itself, too, could well map out the direction of the next phase of climate negotiations, mobilizing the entire climate family, with every member playing its role. This being the last session of the Conference he would attend as Executive Secretary, he expressed his heartfelt hopes for its success.

G. Other statements

16. At the 1st plenary meeting, on 29 October 2001, statements were made by the representatives of Iran (on behalf of the Group of 77 and China); Burkina Faso (on behalf of the African Group); Switzerland (on behalf of the Environmental Integrity Group); Ghana; Slovenia (on behalf of Central Group 11, Malta and Cyprus); Mali (on behalf of the Least Developed Countries); Saudi Arabia; Australia; Kazakhstan (on behalf of the Central Asia, Caucasus and Moldova countries); Japan; Kuwait; Belgium (on behalf of the European Community and its member States); Canada; and United Arab Emirates.

17. All those who spoke reiterated their commitment to maintaining the political integrity of the Bonn Agreements (decision 5/CP.6), and indicated that the task of the present session was to translate those Agreements into legal language in order to complete the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action.

II. ORGANIZATIONAL MATTERS

(Agenda item 2)

A. Status of ratification of the Convention and its Kyoto Protocol

(Agenda item 2 (a))

18. For its consideration of this sub-item at its 1st plenary meeting, on 29 October 2001, the Conference of the Parties had before it an information document on the status of ratification of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and its Kyoto Protocol (FCCC/CP/2001/INF.3).

19. On the invitation of the President, the Conference of the Parties took note with satisfaction that, as at 29 October 2001, 186 States and one regional economic integration organization were Parties to the Convention, and thus eligible to participate in decision-making at the session.

20. The Conference further took note that, as at 29 October 2001, 42 Parties had ratified or acceded to the Kyoto Protocol. It also expressed its appreciation to those States that had ratified the Protocol, and invited other States to take the necessary measures to do so.

B. Adoption of the rules of procedure

(Agenda item 2(b))

21. At the 1st plenary meeting, on 29 October 2001, the President informed the Conference of the Parties that, building on the work of his predecessor (see paragraph 4 above), he intended to undertake further informal consultations with a view to finding a solution which would enable the Conference to adopt its rules of procedure.

22. On the proposal of the President, the Conference of the Parties decided that, in the meantime, as at previous sessions, the draft rules of procedure as contained in document FCCC/CP/1996/2 should continue to be applied, with the exception of draft rule 42.

23. At the 8th plenary meeting, on 9 November 2001, the President informed the Conference that, owing to the intensive character of the negotiations at the current session, it had not proved possible to undertake consultations to resolve this issue. At the same meeting, the Conference of the Parties, on the proposal of the President, decided that this item should be placed on the provisional agenda of its eighth session, and noted the President's intention to conduct informal consultations with Parties and to report thereon at that session.

C. Adoption of the agenda

(Agenda item 2(c))

24. For its consideration of this sub-item at its 1st plenary meeting, on 29 October 2001, the Conference of the Parties had before it a note by the Executive Secretary containing the provisional agenda and annotations (FCCC/CP/2001/6 and Add.1), which had been prepared in agreement with the President of the sixth session of the Conference, and also took into account the views expressed by Parties during informal consultations conducted by the Chairman of the Subsidiary Body for Implementation at its fourteenth session, and by members of the Bureau of the Conference of the Parties at its sixth session.

25. At the same meeting, the President recalled that item 7 of the provisional agenda, "Second review of the adequacy of Article 4, paragraphs 2 (a) and (b), of the Convention", which had been held in abeyance at the first part of the sixth session of the Conference, had been included in the provisional agenda in accordance with rules 10 (c) and 16 of the draft rules of procedure being applied. He recalled that the Group of 77 and China had proposed amending that item to read "Review of the adequacy of implementation of Article 4, paragraphs 2 (a) and (b), of the Convention".

26. In this connection, he added that he shared the view of his predecessor that the central task of the present session was to complete negotiations on the decisions giving effect to the Bonn Agreements. This was a matter to which a number of Parties ascribed particular importance. Consequently he proposed that discussions on agenda item 7, on which he recognized that there were divergent views, should be held in abeyance until that process had been completed.

27. The Conference of the Parties accordingly adopted the provisional agenda contained in document FCCC/CP/2001/6, on the understanding that item 7 was held in abeyance. The President indicated that he would undertake consultations on this issue and report back to the Conference.

28. The agenda, as adopted at the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties, thus read as follows:

1. Opening of the session:
 - (a) Statement by the President of the Conference at its sixth session;
 - (b) Election of the President of the Conference at its seventh session;

52. At the 1st plenary meeting, on 29 October 2001, the President recalled that the Conference of the Parties, at the second part of its sixth session, had forwarded two sets of texts to the Conference at its seventh session: the first set consisting of decisions on which consensus had been reached and which were forwarded for adoption (FCCC/CP/2001/5/Add.1); the second consisting of draft decisions forwarded to the seventh session for elaboration, completion and adoption (FCCC/CP/2001/5/Add.2).

53. He proposed that, in the interests of efficiency, and with the concurrence of the Bureau, the Conference continue the mandate of the negotiating groups established at the second part of the sixth session, under their respective chairs, as follows:

- (a) Mechanisms pursuant to Articles 6, 12 and 17 of the Kyoto Protocol

54. At the same meeting, the President indicated that, with the concurrence of the Bureau, he intended to undertake informal consultations on the draft decision on matters related to land use, land-use change and forestry; and, as necessary, consultations on the draft decision on “good practices” in policies and measures.

55. The President noted that the present session should also see the election of the Executive Board of the Clean Development Mechanism, on which he intended to hold consultations, with a view to the finalization of nominations.

56. He urged all concerned to complete their discussions by the end of the first week of the session, so that the Conference would then be able to determine the future course of the negotiations. In this connection, he recalled that the Conference should adopt, during the high-level segment, the complete package of decisions referred to in agenda item 3(a) and 3(b).

57. At the same meeting, the Conference of the Parties was informed that the secretariat would be circulating a note containing a technical and legal review⁷ of the decisions contained in FCCC/CP/2001/5/Add.1. 60. At the 8th plenary meeting, on 10 November 2001, the President announced that consensus now had been reached on the texts of decisions on all the different issues relating to the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, which would constitute "The Marrakesh Accords". The President also expressed his appreciation to all who had contributed to this major achievement: the co-chairmen of the negotiating groups; the chairmen of the subsidiary bodies; Mr. Mohammed Valli Moosa (South Africa) and Mr. Philippe Roch (Switzerland) who facilitated consultations on outstanding issues related to mechanisms, Article 5, 7 and 8 of the Kyoto Protocol and input to the World Summit on Sustainable Development; and Mr. Peter Hodgson (New Zealand) who facilitated consultations on outstanding issues related to land use, land-use change and forestry.

He added that the Third Assessment Report of the IPCC had made clear that the threat of climate change was genuine, and that the increasing trend towards global warming had a direct impact upon the whole of humankind, owing to the vulnerability of ecosystems and the fragility of economic and social systems. The greater was the need, therefore, for adaptation programmes, where new technologies could be a useful tool in minimizing the effect of climate change. Such programmes could also promote sustainable development, which itself was based on the synergy between economic growth, social equity, and the preservation of natural resources.

187. He added that climate change had multiple effects, including the aggravation of poverty and the heightening of inequalities, through the advance of the desert and rising sea levels. The international community could no longer accept a situation in which the effects of greenhouse gases had a negative impact on food security and access to fresh water, making it difficult to combat poverty and hunger.

188. In conclusion, he noted that the achievements at the present session of the Conference, which represented a milestone in the process to combat climate change, would ensure the ratification of the Kyoto Protocol before the Earth Summit, a prompt start to the CDM, and a step forward in the participation of women in climate discussions.

189. The President then declared the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties closed.

Statements made at the opening of the high-level segment of the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties

A. Address by His Majesty Mohammed VI King of Morocco¹

Almost ten years ago, when I was addressing the Earth Summit in Rio, on behalf of my late father His Majesty King Hassan II – May God bless his soul – I stated that making a choice for humanistic ecology actually meant opting for an approach which places man at the very centre of any undertaking, leaving it up to him to assume his destiny, and reminding him of his rights as well as his duties and obligations.

As I am speaking to you this morning, from Marrakesh, at the spiritual, historic and cultural heart of the Kingdom of Morocco, I think that, given this difficult international juncture, my reference then, to the shared ethical values whereby we became citizens bound by a duty of solidarity towards the same earth and the same mankind, is more relevant today than ever before.

Your presence here reflects your trust in, and commitment to, the immutable ideals which make up the very foundations of this Arab-Islamic nation, which is deeply rooted in its African heritage, firmly dedicated, throughout its centuries-old history, to the values of freedom, peace, dignity, fairness, tolerance and solidarity. This nation upholds the message of Islam, an Islam which advocates progress and open-mindedness. It is endeavouring to develop, on this side of the Mediterranean, an area where democracy is growing and thriving and where human rights are also governed by the logic of economic considerations. Indeed, this requires that the wealth which is created be turned into income which is shared on a more equitable basis and in a manner which fully accommodates environment conservation requirements.

Your meeting in Morocco is also a message of hope and reason. You are here, we are together, to tell the rest of the world that hatred and rejection of the “other”, confrontation and the perversions of terrorism and extremism, cannot and must not be reduced and oversimplified by a vision which is blurred by emotion on the spur of the moment, and conveniently seduced by the comfort of ignorance and misconstruction, to the extent that it divides the world by concentrating the “good guys” in just one side of it.

Being aware of the dangers inherent in such a drift, you will be seeking, through the Marrakesh Conference, notwithstanding the diversity of your respective nations and civilizations, to send the message of hope which lies within you. This in itself is the first accomplishment of this Conference which marks a historic step in the process leading from the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. It also confirms, after thirty years of efforts and discussion, the relevance of the Action Plan adopted in Stockholm in 1972.

Since the start of your Conference, you have addressed a wide range of issues, all very important. You have talked about the climate, of course, and also about the economy and development, water and oceans, education, health and other issues. You have handled numbers and figures, made projections and forecasts, drawn up models and patterns. You have read over again pages of our history and scrutinized the future of our planet. In this context of world-wide globalization of the economy, and of communications and the climate, when those questions are raised, one does not always pay the necessary attention to dialogue between civilizations, to cultural interaction and to their determining impact in fostering the emergence of universal conscience which fully grasps the dangers lying ahead for the very fate of humanity. To you, prominent scientists, to the great policy makers who have joined us, to the journalists who are the historians of the present that we live in, to the men and women of goodwill in charge of non-governmental organizations, to all of you who are meeting in this great assembly, I would like to say a few words about solidarity, responsibility and commitment.

When, by God's will, I succeeded my late father – May God bless his soul – I made every effort to give full substance to the concept of solidarity, because it is, in my view, part and parcel of the very notion of responsibility. Solidarity is not merely compassion: it is basically a matter of conscience and awareness; awareness that the highest of walls, the toughest of shields and the strongest of assurances, cannot silence the voice of the underprivileged, nor the cries of the oppressed; awareness that, on earth, there cannot be havens of peace and serenity, here, and spots of war and starvation, there; awareness that none can live in peace, serenity and prosperity, while the neighbours, across the road, are tortured by the pangs of injustice, oppression and destitution. Convinced that it is from that awareness that responsibility arises, I invite you all to ponder over the following question: Should one always wait for appalling tragedies to occur before one realizes what is happening and comes to feel responsible for the safeguarding of the Earth, as the common heritage of humanity, and also before profit-motivated interests are superseded by considerations related to humanistic ecology?

Morocco, for its part, does not submit to this assumption, as though it were an inescapable fatality. It does assume, to the best of its ability, all the responsibilities inherent in a State. In hosting this Conference, Morocco wants to reassert its full adherence to the principles of international solidarity, with respect for the preservation of the environment. It considers that addressing the issues of climate change, and the environment in general, is the shared responsibility of the whole international community. It therefore calls for solidarity among peoples, among interest groups and among the various regions.

As it is aware that the coming into force of the Kyoto Protocol is an important step in concluding the long process of reaction to climate change, the Kingdom of Morocco, despite the low rate of its greenhouse gas emissions, has decided to ratify the Protocol. It further calls on other countries, mainly industrial nations, to do likewise, so that the Protocol may become operational as soon as possible; because what is at stake, actually, is the general interest of mankind as a whole.

Morocco has gone through severe climatic conditions as a result of drought and desertification. Similarly, its environment, just as is the case with the other developing nations, has suffered from the negative impact of the rapid changes in the social and economic context which have led to the emergence of new production and consumption patterns. Determined to face the challenges, and in keeping with sustainable development objectives, the Kingdom of Morocco has initiated efforts on different fronts, within the framework of a National Action Plan, wherein the ecological aspect ranks high among the priorities in the development process. These efforts fall within a regional and international solidarity scheme and are related to Mediterranean programmes which provide for sustainable upkeep and tapping of the sea habitat and the coast. In addition, the Kingdom of Morocco is endeavouring to ensure that priority is given to Africa in international efforts pertaining to the preservation of the environment.

In order to contribute efficiently to the world-wide effort for the protection of the climate, and to enforce the commitments arising from the Framework Convention on Climate Change and from the Rio Summit, African countries, and developing nations in general, are very much in need of strong international support, in terms of environmentally friendly technology, know-how and human and institutional capacity. Moreover, this effort requires new and additional financial resources as well as the reduction of the burden of the external debt of these countries. This extra effort would enable them to allocate more substantial resources to sustainable development projects and to the struggle against poverty, which is still a major factor in the deterioration of the environment in the southern part of the planet. Furthermore, Government aid for development should be raised to the level agreed by the international community.

It is gratifying for us to note that the three-decade long process for the protection of the environment, which was initiated in the heart of northern Europe, Scandinavia, has ultimately reached its concluding state in Morocco, a country of the South with an age-long history of support for the just causes of this very South. This actually confirms that if there should be one single issue, one common source of concern, which has turned us into citizens, bound by the duty of solidarity towards the same earth and the same humanity - notwithstanding occasional tragedies and drifts - that issue certainly concerns the protection of our environment, an environment whose points of strength or weaknesses know neither North nor South; they are limited by no boundaries.

Accordingly, what the world needs is a new approach to ecology, an approach based on concertation and on the search for solutions of compromise among all the parties involved, an approach which makes good the provisions of the Rio Declaration according to which the sovereignty of a State stops when it starts affecting the environment of other States or areas located beyond the boundaries of its national jurisdiction; an approach which takes into account the legitimate national and strategic interests of all countries, and which guarantees fairness and transparency in such a way that we feel encouraged, each at his level, to make the necessary concessions in order to manage the planet as the common heritage of mankind.

In these times of confusion, uncertainty and questioning; in these times of mobilisation and of rising awareness about our common destiny, I pray Almighty God to grant that out of your blessed Conference may emerge a message of optimism, of wisdom, of moderation and of hope, a message which is so badly needed by mankind today.

Thank you for your generous efforts in making this a successful Conference. I must commend your longstanding commitment in support of the just causes of the environment. Wishing you full success in your proceedings, I would like to say welcome again to Morocco, a land of convergence and interaction between civilizations and cultures, a nation which has always been guided by a spirit of moderation, tolerance and openness in its constructive deeds and endeavours, while striving to prevent the spoiling of our planet. This is the very reason why God the Almighty created man and made him the custodian of this mission.

May peace, mercy and the blessings of God be upon you.

B. Message from the Secretary-General of the United Nations²

It gives me great pleasure to send my greetings to this crucially important Conference. His Majesty King Mohammed VI and the people of Morocco merit our gratitude for hosting this event and welcoming so many people, from so many countries, into their midst.

You meet to further the global fight against climate change. And you come together in the understanding that climate change is not just an environmental issue, but is also a fundamental development issue. Its adverse impacts endanger economic and social progress. And our response to it will require significant, long-term changes in economic and social behaviour. The Convention that you have had the wisdom to ratify provides the framework for those responses, and it commits the rich, industrialized countries to take the lead in modifying emission trends - including the United States.

The agreements reached in Bonn last July were a political breakthrough that will help guide action on climate change for many years to come. I know you share my great appreciation for Jan Pronk of the Netherlands for his inspiring leadership as President of the sixth Conference of the Parties. I am pleased that he has now agreed to serve as my Special Envoy for next year's World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg. I am also confident that the discernment of the incoming President of the Conference of Parties, Mohamed Elyazghi of Morocco, will help you to complete and adopt the draft decisions prepared in Bonn.

The Bonn Agreements were also a victory for multilateralism. Indeed, joining forces against global threats to human society and the planet has never been more important. Success in Marrakesh would sustain this momentum, generating hope that the Kyoto Protocol could be ratified by the industrialized countries and enter into force in time for next year's Johannesburg Summit.

This is the first Conference of the Parties to take place in Africa. African nations have contributed little to the build-up of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere. But like other poor countries, their reliance on agriculture, forestry and fisheries, as well as their vulnerability to natural disasters, leaves them most exposed to the consequences. Marrakesh should show them that the developed world is taking this challenge seriously, and doing its part to keep climate change from introducing a new factor of inequity into our world.

Climate change is certainly one of the greatest global challenges the world has ever had to face. But let us not be daunted. Far more is within our power than is commonly understood. Moreover, the changes in our economies and transformation of our societies will bring enormous opportunities to create new jobs, raise incomes, and improve living conditions. These are opportunities we can and must seize without delay.

Let me close by paying tribute to Mr. Michael Zammit Cutajar, whose tenure as Executive Secretary of the UNFCCC secretariat is coming to an end. For the past decade, he has helped to guide this process with great acumen and built up an effective and respected secretariat team in Bonn. His leadership will be sorely missed, but I have no doubt that he will remain an articulate voice on this and related issues. I know you join me in wishing him all the best in his future pursuits.

Please accept my best wishes for a successful conference.

C. Statement by the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change

The time has come to share some parting reflections with the Conference of the Parties. I have been working as Executive Secretary for over ten years. It has been a decade of learning for me: learning about climate change and learning about management. I have enjoyed this learning experience. I consider myself fortunate to have been given the opportunity to enter the climate change negotiations at their start and to build a team from its foundation. I thank the Secretaries-General who have appointed me, as well as the Governments represented here, for this opportunity, for their confidence and for their support. I thank too those who have helped me learn, including the Chairmen of the IPCC, leaders of partner organizations, many outstanding negotiators and presiding officers and, above all, my colleagues in the secretariat. Through this learning process, I have acquired a network of friends and acquaintances engaged in the negotiations. This is an asset that I will take away with me.

One of the first and lasting lessons that I absorbed concerned the economic roots of the issue that we are addressing. It is the economy that generates climate change and it is in economic transformations that solutions must be sought. Moreover, it is economic defensiveness that has the greatest influence on the intergovernmental negotiations. This defensiveness often obscures long-term interests and obstructs their realization. It would be naive to ask governments to put their perceived economic interests aside. I hope, however, that a better appreciation of the costs of inaction and of the economic benefits of innovation in technologies and in lifestyles will generate a more balanced economic vision. Much needs to be done by way of information and advocacy before such a vision can take hold. I look forward to a future phase of negotiation in which a better understanding of the regional impacts of climate change and a common view of a desirable level of atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases will motivate a more positive approach to a cooperative global strategy.

While I leave these negotiations hoping for more constructive attitudes in future, I can share with you the satisfaction - indeed the pride - that I feel in the secretariat team that serves you. I would like to thank each member of the secretariat for the support that I have received from them. I thank those who were part of our start-up in Geneva, those who made the journey to Bonn and those who joined the team there. They are one team, a diverse, dynamic and committed team – committed, in the words of an emerging vision statement, to the highest standards of professionalism and objectivity in serving the Parties.

If you consider that the secretariat serves you well, please bear in mind that it is so because you, the Parties, have given us the space in which to do our job, while you do yours. Within this space, we have exercised the necessary managerial autonomy within the framework of the United Nations. We have aimed for quality in the recruitment of staff, while also promoting geographical diversity and gender balance. We have invested in training and other activities aimed at motivating and retaining staff. We have sought to manage your moneys with integrity yet with flexibility. I thank you for the trust that has enabled you to leave us this space and desist from micro-management. This, I believe, is a formula that has worked and that you would be wise to continue.

Your secretariat is only one of the institutions supporting the Convention. The achievement of the Convention's objective requires effective observational networks, an independent and representative source of scientific and technological assessment, a responsive financial mechanism, and operating partners whose contributions can add value to the work of the Parties and the secretariat. You have these institutions: they are the WMO, the IPCC, the GEF, and partners such as UNDP, UNEP and UNITAR. An effective global strategy to combat climate change must strengthen these institutions, as well as the Convention secretariat in Bonn. It must also make the most of the interactions among related Conventions – notably our sister Conventions on biological diversity and desertification - and it must reach out beyond the governmental sphere to economic actors and civil society.

I was parachuted into the climate change negotiations a few days after they started in the suburbs of Washington, D.C. in February 1991. I made a brief speech at the invitation of our then Chairman, the late Jean Ripert. My key words were “efficiency” and “equity”. I perceived then that this new negotiation had to do with the emerging “world order”. I believe it still. This Convention is not about conservation and pollution abatement in the usual sense of those terms. It is about the transformations that will bring about greater efficiency in the use of resources and greater equity in access to them. The market is a guide to efficiency. But governmental intervention and corporate responsibility are necessary to promote equity. Without equity, the fruits of efficiency will not endure. This is not just a convention on the global environment. It is a convention on the sustainable development of the global economy.

I wish you well. I wish you all success, here in Marrakesh and in carrying the Convention forward to its future.
