

Neeraj Prasad
World Bank Institute

Neeraj Prasad is Manager of the WBI climate change team, which focuses on capacity development and practitioner networks on sustainable energy, climate-smart agriculture, sustainable cities and low emissions development.

Before joining the World Bank in 1996, Mr. Prasad was a member of the Indian Administrative Service, with assignments as a development administrator, in the federal Finance Ministry, and as Assistant to India's Executive Director in the IMF. In the World Bank, he supported and led Environment sector operations in Asia, including its single largest Carbon Finance transaction, the China HFC-23 project. He supported the management of its Carbon Finance Unit.

He has co-authored a number of climate change analytical pieces and handbooks, and has spoken on the topic at seminars and workshops across the world.