Gender in Adaptation Planning for the Agriculture Sectors

Guide for Trainers

A new resource for countries looking to transform gender-related goals into concrete action, this complete set of materials can be easily adopted by trainers working with adaptation planners in the agriculture sector.

Training topics include:

- Why does gender matter in adaptation in agriculture?
- What is a gender-responsive adaptation planning process?
- How do we set gender-responsive adaptation priorities?
- How do we design and use gender indicators?

And more!

Coming
July
2019

Developed by FAO and UNDP together with partners in Colombia, The Gambia, Kenya, Nepal, The Philippines, Uganda, Uruguay, Viet Nam and Zambia, under the Integrating Agriculture in National Adaptation Plans (NAP-Ag) programme.

Contribution of LWPG/GAP to the NAP-Ag work on gender

Contributions

- Consensus represented by the LWPG/GAP and legitimacy it gives to gender mainstreaming is useful in awareness raising among stakeholders
- Process of receiving country submissions to develop GAP is helpful for understanding countries' perspectives and tailoring our efforts to their capacity needs
- Five priorities important frame of reference for checking our own progress and priorities

Questions

- Whose capacity needs to be targeted?
- How can we complement the individual-level skills developed in trainings with organizational change?
- How do we define a "gender-responsive" climate policy, plan or programme?
