CHAPTER IV. Child Education and Empowerment (annex IV)

- The annex details guidelines and good practices with respect to child education on and empowerment in climate action, which are non-exhaustive and intended to provide information to governments and other stakeholders to assist them in educating and empowering children to be part of and lead climate action.

Annex IV

Existing guidelines and good practices with respect to child education on and empowerment in climate action

[English only]

I. Introduction

1. Climate change affects the lives and livelihoods of every human being around the world, but children are disproportionately more vulnerable to its impacts, such as disasters, diseases and displacement. Their greater vulnerability rests on their more immature physiological defence systems, the more direct ways in which they interact with their environment, their dependence on adults and the accumulation of risks and damages over their lifetimes.¹ Climate change also exacerbates their existing risks and inequalities, which are often interconnected, generating differentiated impacts among them (see the box below).

2. Moreover, despite being the least responsible for climate change, children will bear the greatest burden of its impacts. Approximately 1 billion children globally – nearly half of the world's children – live in countries considered to be at extremely high risk from the impacts of the climate crisis. Children in these countries are exposed to multiple climate-related and environmental shocks, threatening their health, education and protection.²

3. The extent and magnitude of the impacts of climate change on children is compelling governments and other stakeholders to take action to protect their rights and well-being.³ There is also a growing recognition of the role of children as powerful agents of change in addressing and responding to climate change.⁴ Under the UNFCCC process, Parties are encouraged to implement climate policies and action that are gender-responsive, fully respect human rights and empower children and youth.⁵

4. The preamble to the Paris Agreement states that, when taking action to address climate change, Parties should respect, promote and consider their respective obligations on human rights, including the rights of children and intergenerational equity. In its general comment on children's rights and the environment, with a special focus on climate change,⁶ the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child notes that children's rights, like all human rights, are indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, with some rights particularly threatened by climate change and other rights playing an instrumental role in safeguarding children's rights in relation to the environment.⁷

5. Educating and empowering children is closely linked to the safeguarding and fulfilment of their rights, including the right to a clean, healthy and sustainable environment. ACE and its six elements, especially education, public access to information and public participation, have direct linkages to the rights under the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, such as to education (Articles 28–29), to access to information (Articles 13 and 17), to be heard (Article 12) and to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly (Articles 13 and 15).

CHAPTER V. National ACE Focal Points

ACE FPs Academy (activity C.1)

Network of ACE FPs

Partnerships and collaboration

Needs assessments

Children & youth engagement

Regional Workshops (activity C.1)

Showcased good practices for using ACE to foster systems transformation and discussed ways to further mainstream ACE in delivering climate policies and action

Informal Networking Meeting (activity B.2)

- [Nov '23] Networking with the UN Alliance on ACE
- [Apr '24] Discussion with YOUNGO and update on the planning for SB 60 activities
- [Aug '24] Examples of ACE projects in different regions and discussion on mobilizing funding and resources for ACE

CHAPTER VI. Parties

NDC Synthesis Report

- In the new or updated NDCs Parties generally communicated more clearly, and in more detail, than previously on general principles, past achievements, future commitments, and needs and gaps in relation to ACE.
- More Parties explicitly referred to ACE as a necessary means of mobilizing and empowering society to deliver the mitigation and adaptation objectives outlined in their NDCs.

Good Practice Compendium

- In response to activity A.2, the secretariat prepared a compendium of good practices for integrating ACE elements into NDCs, showcasing examples of ACE activities and measures included in NDCs and ways of strengthening the role of ACE in developing and implementing new or updated NDCs following the conclusion of the first GST.
