CARICOM

Janine Felson is an Ambassador of Belize and a senior advisor to the Alliance of Small Island States (AOSIS) and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) on climate and ocean matters. For more than two decades, she has been a leading voice for small island developing states (SIDS) in key negotiations including the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, the Paris Agreement and the intergovernmental conference for a new high seas treaty on marine biological diversity, with the aim of tailoring global policy to the specific needs and circumstances of SIDS. She has served as an expert on and facilitator for several UN bodies and was a member of the Board of the Green Climate Fund. From 2019-2020, she was the chief strategist and deputy chair of the AOSIS. Janine is concurrently completing a fellowship with the Melbourne Sustainable Society Institute (MSSI) where she is focused on integrated approaches to global policy making on climate, oceans and sustainable development.
