

Dr. Pavel Zámyslický graduated with a master's degree in economics and energy management and subsequently completed his doctoral studies in business management and economics at the Czech Technical University in Prague. In 2005, he joined the Ministry of the Environment, and in 2007, he became a director of the department dealing with climate change and energy issues. Since 2022, he has also served as a Deputy Director General of the Climate Protection Section. Throughout his professional career, he has worked with various policy instruments, strategies, and financing programs in the field of energy and climate at the national and international level. For more than fifteen years, he served as the Czech Republic's chief negotiator and the National Focal Point for the UNFCCC, the Kyoto Protocol, and the Paris Agreement. He successfully led teams dealing with climate issues during the Czech EU Presidency in 2009 and 2022.